the potential of terrorist attacks against agricultural targets agroterrorism is increasingly recognised as a national security threat especially after the events of september 11 2001 agroterrorism is a subset of bioterrorism and is defined as the deliberate introduction of an animal or plant disease with the goal of generating fear causing economic losses and or undermining stability attacks against agriculture are not new and have been conducted or considered by both nation states and substate organisations throughout history the results of an agroterrorist attack may include major economic crises in the agricultural and food industries loss of confidence in government and possibly human casualties humans could be at risk in terms of food safety or public health especially if the chosen disease is transmissible to humans zoonotic public opinion may be particularly sensitive to a deliberate outbreak of disease affecting the food supply public confidence in government could be eroded if authorities appear unable to prevent such an attack or to protect the population's food supply. Agriculture has several characteristics that pose unique problems for managing the threat. Agricultural production is geographically dispersed in unsecured environments. Livestock are frequently concentrated in confined locations and then transported and commingled with other herds. Pest and disease outbreaks can quickly halt economically important exports. Many veterinarians lack experience with foreign animal diseases that are resilient and endemic in foreign countries. Agriculture and food production generally have received less attention in counterterrorism and homeland security efforts but more recently agriculture has garnered more attention in the expanding field of terrorism studies. Laboratory and response systems are being upgraded to address the reality of agroterrorism. This new book examines this threat and the preparations underway for countering it. contains facts, tables, charts, and statistics on different groups of American women and aspects of women's lives in the U.S., covering such topics as women's education, health, and occupations; women as criminals and as victims; women in politics; and child and elder care.

This publication contains practical guidance on the design, implementation, and evaluation of appropriate food fortification programmes. They are designed primarily for use by nutrition-related public health programme managers but should also be useful to all those working to control micronutrient malnutrition, including the food industry. The guidelines are written from a nutrition and public health perspective, and topics discussed include the concept of food fortification as a potential strategy for the control of micronutrient malnutrition; the prevalence, causes, and consequences of micronutrient deficiencies; and the public health benefits of micronutrient malnutrition control. Technical information on the various chemical forms of micronutrients that can be used to fortify foods, regulation, and international harmonisation, communication, advocacy, consumer marketing, and public education.
